ABOUT THESE BOOKS

BY JAMES BRANCH CABELL

UPON a number of counts, I prefer here to say nothing about these books. Apart, entirely, from much inner monitory whispering as to the aureate qualities of silence, I have found the minuteness and split hairs — the superfine orthology and the paraded cantlets and flitters — of the bibliographic art, when in full exercise, to beget in its beholders speechlessness. . . . Nobody will I hope, misunderstand my meaning. With all appropriate awe and admiration I have considered intricate mathematical research as to the number of existent “states” of The Eagle’s Shadow, and concerning how many copies of From the Hidden Way display upon the backbone an underlined C. I have applauded the nicety with which one can distinguish to a quarter-inch between the second and first printing of Jurgen. I have been suitably perturbed over the prestige imparted by a blue binding to The Soul of Melicent as compared with the sable investure of relative parvenus. And I have, rather naturally, rejoiced that this meticulous method of cataloguing in legible print all my least deeds and misdeeds as a writer does not, even more embarrassingly, invade the field of my actions as a human being. . . . It is, in fine, my appreciation, rather than any crass derisory estimate, of such painstaking in our superficial world, that troubles me. It is as indeliberation's beholder that I am left, really, speechless.

And, for another matter, I would prefer here to say nothing about these books because thus only might I avoid confessing that, were the choice afforded me, no one of these first editions hereinafter anatomized would to-day exist. That I perceive to be, as a gambit, maladroit. I, none the less (not all unbiased), cannot but view these first editions with distaste, even shudderingly, as abortions begotten by the depravity of the compositor upon the incompetence of the author. The emotions roused in me by a first edition of Beyond Life or of the revised Cords of Vanity are, in fact, not the sort of thing that can be printed.

These two are in the infirmary of my collected works the worst cases. But in viewing any one of these first editions I am signally condemned to consider the misprints, and the more dire untypographic blunders that are due to auctorial noddings, in rather the frame of mind in which one fidgets through the familiar nightmare of attending a public gathering, cynosurally, in one's sleeping attire. And nowhere could I more pleasurably warm, in the old phrase, the very cockles of my heart than beside a bonfire whose fuel was every existing copy of these first editions. . . .

Yet that is worded over-rashly. For I would perforce protest against destruction of From the Hidden Way, which I admit to be, for reasons utterly unliterary, my favorite among my books; and toward which my sentiments are so disastrously unique that nobody anywhere has ever suggested a second printing. But the others I would incinerate — elatedly and in, as people mystically put it, the twinkling of a bed post — now that a revised and an approximately corrected version of each one of them exists, to fall (by however little) a whit less short of the Intended Edition which will not ever, quite, be completed. . . .

Yet of the Intended Edition, also, it seems that I might wiselier here say nothing; and thus avoid confessing that, even in a bibliography, to list these books according to the date of publication disquiets me. Commencement with The Eagle's Shadow, for example, appears, to me, most clamantly unreasonable in the light of my flaming private conviction that The Eagle's Shadow is, in truth, the fifteenth chapter of the longish Biography upon which I am yet engaged. This point I shall not argue, though, not even with appeals to the prevalent assemblage of the Leather Stocking saga or of the Comédie Humaine or of the works of Rabelais. It seems too generally agreed that, when I speak of my separate publications as the chapters of one book, my babblings are attributable, at the auditor's choice, to affectation or insanity. I privily retain my notion, then, that with the completing, and the fitting into their niches, of some four more chapters, this Biography may yet reveal the coherence of a not unplanned nor wholly accidental edifice. But I retain my notion tacitly: and I elect to blurt out, in my impulsive unconsidered way, nothing further about it here, lest, here again, I wander into over-rash declarings. . . .

In fine, I discover on every side the impossibility of saying anything about the various items of this particular bibliography without asserting rather more than I have leisure to substantiate or second thoughts to endorse. Therefore I skuttle toward shelter in the umbrageous, shielding depths of a jungle of orotundity.

The trouble may well be — here to resort to candor as the likeliest forceps with which to extract the teeth of detection — that I at times regard these books almost quite seriously. And I dare even venture to palliate my attitude. For, these books are, I must however unwillingly admit they are, not merely frivolous æsthetic trivialities, not merely dissolute time-wasting in the wanton fields of what some of us (in Dr. P. E. More's fine phrase) "are pleased to call art." These volumes represent, just as they stand, the increment of such assets in the way of imagination and industry and youth and health as were, two decades since, my sole endowments. Each one of these endowments has been given, utterly, throughout some twenty years, to the making of these books: one all the while, as an Economist, regarding this disposal of one's assets as upon the whole a possibly judicious hazard. These books, just as they stand, thus represent the dividends and accrued interest of their writer's annual investments; and therefore should by level-headed persons, I submit, be regarded with the unfrivolity appropriate not (heaven knows!) to any "artistic" nonsense, but to the outcome of a business transaction. For the Biography is really a matter of finance, in that man-handled word's first meaning. And in a business transaction, failure has its graver aspects, and not even the most imperilled investor goes under bond to be wholly free of seriousness.

So I confess that, here again for reasons utterly unliterary, I regard each one of the increments of my long-standing investment with a naïve and unhidden seriousness. They are diverse. A number in no way resemble reading-matter. That perhaps is why — just as I stated at outset — I prefer, for more reasons than one can have at only ten finger-tips, here to say nothing about these books. And I have, I hope, indulged this preference.

PREFACE

I HAVE been asked by The Centaur Book Shop for a note of introduction to this bibliography of the writings of James Branch Cabell, and I find myself at a loss for any word other than in evasion or apology. For today, as it so happens, I have run through some score or more of press cuttings of reviews of two of Cabell's books — his first and his latest — and I find expressed in them almost every conceivable opinion that may be held of a man's work; and, reflecting that these are but a few samples of the criticism which has been devoted to Cabell in the past five years, I hold it the part of wisdom to refrain from any exposition of, or comment upon, the books of which this bibliography is the genealogical record.

So much by way of evasion. For the rest, I have attempted to make of this book a complete and accurate accounting of the published writings of Cabell, with such physical descriptions as will enable the collector to identify first editions of each of his books. Happily, that is a task of no great difficulty; for human imperfection and the perversity of printers (and of publishers) have conspired to differentiate the first issues of each book from its less faulty successors. Thus you will find, here, a seated heroine, there, a definite article mislaid, elsewhere, a letter c fallen from its proper level, each contriving to flout uniformity and contributing to a Comedy of Variations, to which Mr. Cabell, by means of endless revisions and emendations, has generously added. I might, indeed, with some show of justice have hereinafter listed separately almost every one of the editions and impressions of Cabell's various books, for in few of them has he failed to make several minor textual changes. That I have not done so will, I trust, make no one quarrel with me. I have included only those reprints which contain major revisions of the original text, and even in the case of the first English edition of Jurgen, I have refrained from giving an extended description of the book, contenting myself with a note upon its variations from the American text.

Finally, I must here express my thanks to Mr. Cabell for his assistance without which this record would not yet be completed, and to Mr. Harold Mason and to Mr. David Jester, for their patience in the face of many delays.

December 26, 1923

At this point, several weeks ago, I concluded the prefatory note which seemed, at that time, to express all that I had to say upon the subject of Mr. Cabell's books. Now I am moved to add a postscript to the record, and, quite unapologetically, to deal with sundry omissions of which I have been guilty. For I learn that the true Bibliophile is a very Lazarus, and no crumbs are ungrateful to him; and I must, therefore, make mention of certain opuscula which, through inadvertence or mischance, I have failed to mention hereinafter.

How far my ignorance has gone toward making imperfect this record I cannot say. That it includes every work of which Mr. Cabell or I had any recollection, goes without saying. But, though a man's writings are more voluminous than his works, they exceed by little his publications; and let a scrap of original matter once find its way into print, be it a stray commendation of another's book, an inscription in his own, or even a couplet written for a menu, that trifle becomes a part of the author's contribution to literature and its original repository a legitimate "item" for the collector.

Well, be it known, then, that I am guilty in these respects. I have included no word about the various slip covers of novels which bear words of praise from Mr. Cabell. I do not list the catalogue of unpublished books by Benjamin de Casseres, or the catalogues of published books by any number of writers, which contain what publishers shyly call "expressions of opinion" from Mr. Cabell. I do not mention the by no means inconsiderable list of newspapers which once published Mr. Cabell's contribution to a symposium upon "Why People Should Own and Read Books," and his contribution to that other symposium, later reprinted, I am told, in pamphlet form and distributed by Marshall Field & Company of Chicago, upon "The Books I Read as a Child." A scarce item, this, they tell me.

Then, too, I am guilty of ignoring the December, 1923, issue of Mr. Percy Beach's entertaining Book Notes (pp. 8, unbound: Indianapolis: Beach's Bookshop, 1923) on the front page of which appears a facsimile reproduction of a Cabell acrostic to Mr. George T. Keating.

But far more grave, it may be, is the omission from the tale of a Report on a Collection of Hemiptera-Heteroptera from South Dakota by H. M. Parshley, Sc. D., South Dakota State College, (Technical Bulletin No. 2, Smith College, Northampton, Mass., 1922). For here on page 19 you will find described Rhagovelia oriander of the family Velidae, which, a footnote informs the reader, derives its name from Oriander the Swimmer in Figures of Earth. Here in very truth is a rare sample of Mr. Cabell's creative work. For the first Oriander was no other than the compositor whose name appeared upon the galley proofs of Domnei: and Cabell, noting and liking the name, made its bearer a god, from which state he was transformed by Mr. Parshley into a water-bug. . . . To a committee of collectors I leave the determination of whether this monograph is, or is not, an authentic Cabell item. To that committee, also, I am ready to leave the discovery of any additional Cabell items of which I and the author have no present cognizance.

One word more: Today, for the first time, I have read — with admiration at the spectacle of a style so completely perfected that it may take form without the admixture of an alien element — Mr. Cabell's foreword, About These Books. To some the almost disquieting similarity in the matter of our observations may seem worthy of comment; and it may even appear obligatory upon either the author or his bibliographer to be somewhat more communicative than, say, a trust magnate at a Senate inquiry. To this omission also I have given thought, but I must content myself with the information that a few pages on begins the record. Beyond this, I, too, although so much less magnificently, have nothing to say about these books.

This edition consisted of 100 signed and numbered copies, with extra fly-leaf, and of 100 copies as above.

(Kingsland Edition)

BRANCH OF ABINGDON / Being a Partial Account of / The Branch Family in England / by / James Branch

Cabell / (fleuron) / The Kingsland Edition / (fleuron) / "Volentem proelia me loqui / Victas et urbis increpuit lyra." / (fleuron) / Wm. Ellis Jones' Sons / Richmond, — Virginia / MDCCCCXI /.

Demy octavo  $9\frac{3}{4} \times 6\frac{1}{4}$ : issued in red morocco, with silk end-papers. The cover design is as above, but the back-bone lacks the printer's name, and has a single line at top. The advertising pages at back are omitted. This Kingsland edition, printed on Japan vellum paper, was limited to fifteen signed and numbered copies, of which only ten were actually made, these being numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 14, and 15. In copies 11, 12, 14, and 15, the seventh line of page 114 was reset, the word "Mercia" being substituted for "Chester."

All copies of Branch of Abingdon were issued simultaneously, except copies 11, 12, 14 and 15 of the Kingsland Edition. The error on page 114 was noted before the type was taken down, correction made, and the four copies completed.

Backbone: The Rivet / in / Grand- / fathers / Neck / (a line) / Cabell / McBride /. White end papers. It will be noted that the apostrophe in "Grandfather's" is lacking on backbone of the first three printings. With the third printing (March 1920) the book was issued in the Kalki binding, of brown cloth, in which the front cover is unstamped except in the lower right hand corner, which displays in gilt the Kalki device—within a circle, upon an heraldic wreath a rampant but bridled stallion.

This novel has never been revised, but a number of verbal changes were made in the text of the fifth printing, October 1922.

A small English edition from imported sheets was issued in the autumn of 1915, by McBride, Nast & Company, Ltd. In some copies of this the binding is similar to the first American edition; in others the Chinese figure is omitted, the lettering upon front cover is in black, and the binding of blue-gray cloth.

Co. /; (3) Dedication page: To / Beverley Bland Munford / (31 May 1910) / "Most blithe and sage and gentle, and most brave! / O true clear heart, so quick to wake and war / Against despondency, lest questioning mar / One hour of living, or foiled hopes enslave / And sour another's living! not to the grave / Do we commit you, — we that, watching, are / As men at twilight noting which bright star / Is leaped at, missed, clutched, swallowed by which wave. / "The star is gone? — So be it. It will rise / Elsewhere, and undiminished. Even thus / We know that instantly in Paradise — / Yea, in the inmost court of Heaven's house, — / A gentleman to God lifts those brave eyes / Which yesterday made life more brave for us." /;

 printed, from type.

The first state, which consisted of 245 copies, was bound as above without the dropped c in McBride on the backbone underlined, and is less tall, by  $\frac{1}{4}$  inch, than later issues. In the second state (1920) of 99 copies the c was raised and underlined; the third state (1920) of 176 copies was bound in the correct shade of brown cloth — unlike the first two which were nearly wine-colored — but bore the original design; the fourth (1921) of 100 copies was in the Kalki binding.

THE CREAM OF THE JEST

Revised version, published December 1922

THE / CREAM / OF / THE JEST / (a line) / A Comedy of Evasions / (a line) / by / James Branch Cabell / with an Introduction by / Harold Ward / (five line quotation as in first version) / New York / Robert M. McBride & Company / 1922 /.

COLLATION:— pp. xvi+256, consisting of p. (i) Half-title: The / Cream / of / the Jest; verso: blank; (iii) Line cut of cryptogrammatic design, as on p. (iv) of original edition; verso: List of Books by Mr. Cabell, enclosed in rectangular rule; (v) Title-page: as above; verso: Copyright, 1917, by / James Branch Cabell / (a line) / Printed in the / United States of America / Second Printing, January, 1920 / Third Printing, September, 1920 / Fourth Printing, September, 1921 / Fifth Printing, December, 1922 / (a line) / Published September, 1917 /; (vii) Dedication, as in original edition; verso: blank; ix-xii, text of Introduction by Harold Ward; xiii-xv, Contents; verso of xv: blank; (1) Half-title as in original version; verso: blank; pp. 3-250, text; (251-256) blank.

Crown octavo  $7\frac{7}{8} \times 5$ : brown cloth, gilt lettering, top trimmed, otherwise uncut. Front cover: (Kalki device, in lower right hand corner). Backbone: as in first version, except that the "c" in "McBride" is underlined. White end papers.

This, described on copyright page as the "Fifth Printing, December, 1922," of the novel published in 1917, is a book made from new plates, with many slight revisions and additions: and contains a preface by Harold Ward (pp. ix-xii) not included in any earlier printing.

An English edition was issued in the spring of 1923, by John Lane. The first 1,000 copies were from imported sheets: thereafter the English publishers zined the first version of this book, and issued it without Mr. Ward's Introduction, which the title page, bewilderingly, continued to list among the volume's contents.

This edition contained pictorial end papers, a frontispiece and seven illustrations, with initial letters and tail pieces, by Frank C. Papé. This first edition was limited to 2,000 numbered copies.

With the second printing the illustrations, tail pieces and pictorial end papers were omitted, and the book was issued in the Kalki binding. Also, the quotation upon the title-page reads in this second printing, correctly, "Build an high place, &c."

In this edition the words: "With Illustrations and Decorations by Frank C. Papé" are omitted from the Title-page; upon the copyright page, the notice of the limitation of the edition is omitted, and the words, "Second Printing" are substituted; pp. (ix-x) are omitted.

An English edition, without illustrations, was issued in the November of 1923 by John Lane.
